

Tools4ever Announces User Account Support for Lotus Notes

The latest release of Tools4ever flagship User Management Resource Administrator is now available with complete life cycle management for IBM Lotus Notes email collaboration product. Accounts can be created, managed and deleted with relative ease by help desk personnel or via na integration with a company HR system.

New York, NY (PRWEB) July 12, 2007: Tools4ever is pleased to announce the release of a new version of its industry leading User Management Resource Administrator (UMRA) suite that supports full account lifecycle management for Lotus Notus™.

By utilizing the powerful capabilities inherent in UMRA, organizations of all sizes can easily manage User Account Lifecycles. Input from a variety of sources may be utilized; including human resource systems, web based forms or the delegated users.

The new functionality extends the capabilities from managing accounts in Active Directory, LDAP, Novell and Exchange to allow for automatic provisioning and deletion of accounts in Lotus Notes. In addition to automating the management process, UMRA has built-in capabilities to insure user account name uniqueness, eliminating what can be a tedious manual process.

Speaking about the new Connector, Dean Wiech, Managing Director for Tools4ever stated, "This development is an excellent example of listening to feedback from our clients. Several of our customers have utilized our User Management application to provision and manage Active Directory accounts and requested similar functionality with Lotus Notes. With this latest release, we are delivering complete capabilities to manage accounts with the Lotus Notes environment."
